Constantine Exiled.
Although this war had been started before Constantine returned to the Greek throne in December, 1920, from his exile, in Switzerland, he and his ministers were held responsible for the collapse. Constantine was forced to abdicate and half a dozen of his ministers were tried, condemned and

Prince Andrew, Constantine's brother, was tried, but owing to the protests which poured into Greece from all Europe clemency was shown and the military tribunal of the Greek Revolutionary Commiltee sentenced him to life-long exile instead of death. Disarmament

There was a general move toward disarmament. The Washington conference adjourned early in the year, after agreeing to limitation of naval armaments. Great Britain, Japan and the United States quickly ratified these agreements and began to put them into effect but France and lially held back.

On December 1 a disarmate. Disarmament

Italy held back.

On December 1 a disarmament conference opened at Moscow, with six powers paticipating—Russia. Poland, Finland, Latvia, Lithuania and Esthonia. Rumania had been invited to attend, but failed to do so. Russia agreed to cut down her army to one-fourth its size, demobilizing $600,000 men and retaining 200,000. She offered further to reduce some of the divisious to the rank of militia, so that they would not be under arms continuously.

The League of Nations discussed disarmament at Geneva, but failed to do more than urge the disarmament commission to make concrete proposals instead of continuing the discussions in a general way.

Finances Shaky
The international financial situation gave much anxiety throughout the year. While the British pound sterling gained in value continually the German mark fell to the unprecedent of four on American ed figure of 9,200 for one American dellar. French and Italian money also failed to rally much from the low level of their depreciation.

Harding in Congress.

President Harding has addressed Congress four times during the year—on February 10, a special message in which he successfully urged ratification of the Warburger conference of the Warburger conference. on February 10, a special message in which he successfully urged ratification of the Washington conference treaties without delay; on February 28 another special message urging mactment of a ship subsidy bill; another special message on November 21 on the same subject, and finally on December 8, his annual message to the regular session of the Sixty-Seventh Congress "on the state of the nation."

The bee of economy has applied the sting to every great governmental agency, and far-reaching economies have been flecteded. Although the present salary hardly pays the expenses of a member of the House of Commons, there is some reluctance on the part of the leaders to increase their own salaries at the places, the association contends, in announcing a campaign of education on an elaborate scale to acquaint the public with the fact that patronizing present time, when there is grave un-rest throughout the country because rest throughout the country because of unemployment.

Any move to increase salaries of commoners will probably meet with opposition from members of the Labor Party, who will urge that at a time when thousands of men are walking the streets without work Parliament can ill afford to spend the nation's money in increased legislative salaries. This will afford a real test of the sincerity of the Labor members, too, because of all members the Laborites are as a rule less able to live upon their salaries. The great majority of the Labor members are men who have given up their trades and businesses in order to serve in the House of Commons, their trades and businesses in order to serve in the House of Commons, and they find they are scarcely able to live upon their sclaries. Many of them have given up all attempts at fulfilling some of the requisites of members of Parliament, (particularly those ared old customs with regard those aged on the to dress. The Labor members of the House of Commons, as well as many other members who are "new poor," really need an increase in salary, but it is doubtful whether they will take it until the present unemployment distress has been relieved. Another feature of Booth's programme is the provision for restitution. Loss resulting from the crime, he says, SHOULD BE COMPENSATED FOR FROM THE EARNINGS OF THE PRISONER, not exceeding $1 a day, in case of murder the money to go to dependents of the slain person.

George M. Cohn is going to appear in London in one of his own plays and his first appearance is being awaited with considerable interest. Particular interest attaches to the reception Cohan will get from the Lon-lon critics, who haven't seen any of his work for some time. Of late the London critics have been very harsn with American dramatists and actors and have spared no efforts to con-vince the people of their fair foggy city that nothing good in the theatre can ever be expected to come out of America. "Ragtime is the only art the Americans have." the London the Americans have" the London critics claim, and it remains to be seen whether even George M Cohan van show them wares which they will have to applaud. American motion pictures make wonderful progress in London, probably because British pictures are so wretched, but American drama has hard sledding, and the critics will applaud a most medicore British production, while a good American production is thoroughly dissected with a good deal of venom, too.

The ice is broken. All England seems to be writing for the magazines and newspapers now. The introduction of American dollars into the coffers of English literary agents is probably responsible. England long knew that the Americans weren't very careful of their money, but they never dreamed that they would pay kood money for written words so easily. Now the discovery has been good money for written words so easily.
